FROM THE PEN OF THE PARISH PRIEST

our own church buildings will re-open. Communion. On the face of it, this is an easy question to answer; but in order \star to open safely, we need to make sure our buildings won't become epicentres of coronavirus.

There will be a number of striking changes to our worship, most noticeably the need to be socially distant during services as well as the wearing of face coverings. We will also be limited to thirty people per service, so it may be necessary to have people give notice that they will be attending services. This is dependent largely on how services are organised across both benefices.

ith the re-opening of church To help you think through these buildings across the country changes, it might be helpful to imagine comes the inevitable question of when the following for a service of Holy Upon arriving at > church, people will be greeted and asked to use hand sanitiser, before completing a form for NHS Track and Trace. (These could easily be printed out beforehand, and brought to the service). People will either bring their own service booklet with them, or they will pick up for themselves a booklet for use during the service, and leave it behind to be collected 72 hours later.

When people arrive, they will begin filling the church up from the front, observing social distancing as they move to their seats and where they sit down.

face a range of logistical issues that will need careful thinking through, and at times we will need to be pragmatic. Church buildings will re-open as and Some of our buildings will allow more separately for each building, even where worship once more. there are similarities in building layout.

There may also be a need to change service times to allow services to be taken: there will be a need to make sure clergy and readers can take services safely, and will all need to try and be patient with one another as we move forward and Communion, they will move toward the begin to learn how best to organise our buildings and our services. It is vital that we take our lead from the House of Bishops and follow their guidance, even if we find parts of that guidance frustrating.

But as we look to re-opening our build-At the end of the service, people will ings for worship, a gentle reminder that leave promptly, beginning with those at there will continue to be some churches where it just won't be feasible to open at this time. This might be because of the during the service, it will only be from a state of the building, or because key people involved in the life of the church have been shielding, or because the PCC In returning to our church buildings, we is simply uncertain about opening the building.

when PCCs feel able to support the people to be socially distanced because of opening. It may well be that confidence layout and arrangement of pews - so we will grow as church buildings around us need to think through the logistical issues open up and begin to be used for
